

Tuesday, October 7 | 9:30 a.m. at CBI

This year, October 7th coincides with the first day of Sukkot. At first glance, it would seem like a clash. Sukkot is a joyous festival, a day to celebrate the blessings of one's bountiful harvest. How could we commemorate a dark and heartbreaking event on a day of such celebration?

We are then reminded of the dwellings we are commanded to construct on this festival --

The Sukkah: a flimsy, vulnerable, impermanent structure. This October 7th, join us at services as we experience the joy of the festival coupled with the fragility of the human and Jewish experience. Through the lesson of the sukkah, we will commemorate this most solemn day.
